Girls' Appetites,

A gent'eman who is an advanced thinker and friend of the higher education of women says that some things in the nature and disposition of a girl puzzle him. He overheard two young ladies talking one day about a luncheon they had had. They were going to get a little dove luncheon alone. They had decided on a glass of soda water and an ice cream apiece as the refreshment which would best suit their dainty de-

But just as the girls were entering the restaurant door they met the gentleman who is an advanced thinker and a friend of the higher education of woman. He, too, was going to have function, doubtless more substantial than sods water and ice cream. Like the gallant man he was, however, he said to the young ladies, "Come, girls, and get lus cheon with me." They did not hang back hypocritically, but accepted the invitation in the spirit in which it was given, cheerfully, and went, But now comes the remarkable part of the narrative-the part the puzzled man does not understand. No sooner did they find that devoted man was going to pay for their luncheon than suddenly their appetites expanded like the Afrite let out of his box. They took it all in that day, and when they left the banquet hall they had put away a luncheon of four courses, costing the man $4.99 Worst of all, they went away and laughed about how much they had S.R. WICKERSHAM . . . made the hapless individual pay for their feast. They thought it was a good joke, those two girls.

The man is sadder and wiser. But he would just like to know how it is that girls' appetites can grow so suddenly and enormously. Perhaps they just went through the four courses to show him there wasn't anything mean about them.

Irrigation Prospects.

As an investment for surplus eastern capital, irrigation works in the region west of the 100th meridian offer at present exceptional inducements, and there is no reason to doubt that the expectations formed will be realized. The magnificent fruit raising region of southern California was a part of the so called Great American Desert before irrigation transformed it into absolutely the richest agricultural tract on the earth today. Colorado, too, was a part of the same Creat American Desert laid String or Brass Band Furnished down in the school geographies of forty years ago. California has over three and a Laif million acres of irrigated land under cultivation. The total amount of land now reclaimed and in tillage through this means amounts at present to nearly nineteen million acres. Two methods of irrigation are in vogue. One is the artesian well plan, the other the irrigation ditch method. In the latter method the water is conveyed in flumes and ditches from rivers, lakes and mountain streams. There is a controversy as to which is the better. It will probably be found that artesian wells are best suited to certain localities, and ditches to others. The best way of all to dis tribute the water has been found to be that called subsurface irrigation, in which the water is conducted under ground to the roots of the plants, leading them to strike down into the earth. But this method is the most difficult to introduce and the most expensive.

Give the devil his due. It is to the Mormons we owe the idea of reclaiming arid land through irrigation. Their success in Utah showed the American mind what might be done elsewhere. Salt Lake City itself is at the geographical center of the arid region of the United States. Here the Mormons began their irrigating operations in 1857. In a few years they had transformed a desert into a teeming garden. The same operation maintained at t he same number, be-tween 700 and 800, and they are mak-acres. The farmers of the east will in acres. The farmers of the east will in time take up the irrigation idea and put themselves beyond risk of crop failure through drought.

 Mississippi, written in April, 1890. just after the Grippe had visited that country. "I am a farmer, one of those who have to rise early and work late. At the beginning of last Winter I was on a trip to the City of Vicksburg, Miss., where I got well drenched in a shower of rain. I went home and was soon after seized with a dry, hacking cough. This grew worse every day, until I had to seek relief. I consulted Dr. Dixon who has since died, and he told me to get a bottle of Boschee's German Syrup. Meantime my cough grew worse and worse and then the Grippe came along and I caught that also very severely. My condition then compelled me to do something. I got two bottlesof German Syrup, I entirely clear of the Cough that had hung to me so long, the Grippe, and all its bad effects. I felt tip-top and have felt that way ever since.' PETER J.
